- choice
- flexibility
- decreased social pressure
- ability to learn at own pace

Disliked:

- new expectations
- unsure how to succeed

Blended Environments

How do I prepare my students?

What aspects should be consistent?

Synchronous or Asynchronous

	Synchronous	Asynchronous
Instructional Flexibility	Little flexibility; students have to be online at the same time	More flexible; students can communicate on their own time
Instructional Benefits	Students receive immediate feedback from instructor and classmates; conversations move faster and can be more productive	Allows students time to generate thoughtful responses; encourages participation from shier students
Instructional Limitations	Conversations move too fast for some students; most effective when using microphones and webcams, which can be cost prohibitive	Involves considerable reading and writing skill; students have the option of selectively reading classmates' posts

Preparation to Move Online

- Developmentally appropriate
- Available in multiple formats
- Applications to students' own lives
- Authentic tasks
- Adolescents need to discuss ideas & content with each other

Consistency

- Easy to find expectations & files
- Explore accessibility as a class
- Model accessibility (ex. CC)
- Review adaptations & modifications
- Include parents & guardians

Blended Activities

What kinds of activities will work in both environments?

How can I build in accessibility?

enable screen recording

Task Goals

- Familiarize with different media
- Practice skills early
- Encourage sharing
- Build in cycle of feedback
- Integrate into larger projects
